

SCHLEY

COURT CONVENED TODAY AT WASHINGTON.

ADMIRAL MAKES NO OBJECTION TO RAMSEY AS A JUDGE.

HIGGINSON THE FIRST WITNESS.

Celebrated Case Was Opened at Noon Today, the First Act Being Reading of Navigation Reports by Captain Lemley for 1898—Ramsey Takes Admiral Howison's Place.

Navy Yards, Washington, D. C., Sept. 20.—Admiral Dewey arrived at the court room today at 10:35 a. m., accompanied by Mrs. Dewey. Mrs. Dewey was jokingly introduced by the Admiral to Capt. Lemley, as the "accused who desired to get a divorce." Mrs. Dewey remained but a few minutes, leaving the hall with Attache Chroffut.

Admiral Schley was greeted with applause when he entered court today. This was repressed by the officers of the court. The room was entered by Dewey and his colleagues promptly at 11 o'clock. Admiral Ramsey occupied the place formerly held by Admiral Howison.

Captain Lemley, the judge advocate general, read the order of the navy department appointing Admiral Ramsey to be a member of the court.

"I ask you, Admiral Schley, if you have any objection to any member of this court?" said Captain Lemley.

"I have not," replied Admiral Schley.

Captain Lemley then swore in the members of the court, the three bending forward and each grasping a small Bible.

Captain Lemley was himself sworn in by Admiral Dewey and in turn administered the oath to the clerk and reporter of the court.

Captain Lemley suggested the withdrawal of the court to discuss the method and course of procedure. A recess was taken accordingly.

Admiral Ramsey, before leaving the court room, shook hands cordially with Admiral Schley and his attorney.

Ramsey is a slender, pleasant featured gentleman, bald and very gray. His close cut mustache, too, is snow white and with his ruddy complexion, gives him a warlike appearance that is not borne out by his ready smile and genial manner.

The court reappeared at 11:24. Captain Lemley asked Schley if he had anything to offer, as to how this inquiry should be conducted, whether he would open or permit the department to do so.

Admiral Schley replied: "Go right along."

Lemley then offered for reference the bureau of navigation report for 1898, giving a tabulated statement from movements of vessels.

"We have no objection to its submission," said Judge Raynor, of Schley's counsel, "providing of course, that we are not barred from impeaching the report."

"Of course not," said Captain Lemley, and the report went in.

He said Schley could, if he cared to demand the original documents.

Captain Lemley introduced as evidence a copy of the Senate document relating to the Sampson-Schley controversy together with hydrographic office charts showing the scenes of the campaign.

"Now I will offer," continued Captain Lemley, a chart showing the position of the vessels off Santiago." He spread before the court a blue print about three by five feet.

"I object," spoke up Captain Parker, of Schley's counsel, quickly. "The chart is grossly incorrect. It places the coast line six miles further south and four miles further west than it was in fact."

"The chart does not prove anything," explained Captain Lemley. "It is not put in as evidence, but for reference."

Captain Lemley read the department order, assigning Sampson to the command of the North Atlantic squadron, also that giving Schley command of the flying squadron at Hampton Roads. Admiral Francis J. Higginson was then sworn. He stated that he

JIM BROWN HANGED TODAY

ASHEVILLE, ALA., Sept. 20.—Jim Brown, colored, was hanged here today for a criminal assault upon Miss Dell Garrett, of Springville, the young daughter of a highly respected St. Clair family. She was returning from school through a lonely bypath one day last May when attacked by the negro. The affair quickly became known and in a short time the woods were being scoured in all directions for the negro. The search was kept up several days and one negro was shot to death at Leeds, in this county, because the mob thought he was Brown. The negro however, managed to get out of Alabama and made his way to Charleston, S. C., where he was finally captured.

The trial of Brown, which took place in Asheville, some six weeks ago, brought about one of the most sensational affairs in the history of the state. After the negro had been convicted and the date of his execution fixed, a mob attacked the court house and was only prevented from lynching the negro by the firm stand of the sheriff and his deputies. The mob was fired upon and Walter Blankenship was killed outright, his brother was dangerously wounded and a boy was slightly hurt.

SWIFT

AND SURE WILL BE JUSTICE METED OUT.

ASSASSIN DECLARES HE IS NOW READY TO DIE.

LAWYERS IN CONSULTATION.

Insanity to be the Plea of the Defense.

No Lengthy Hypothetical Questions. No Interminable Quibbling—Trial of Czolgosz Will Last From Two to Three Days.

Buffalo, N. Y., Sept. 20.—Judge Loren L. Lewis and Judge Robert C. Titus, counsel appointed to defend Czolgosz, are in conference today. They declare that they have not yet had time to outline their defense, but expect to be ready when the case is called on Monday next.

All efforts on the part of the attorneys to secure a statement from the prisoner as to his desires in the conduct of the defense, have signally failed. On irrelevant subjects the prisoner will converse freely, his discourse being most intelligent. The mental, economic questions and the like the prisoner will debate freely. As soon as the great crime is mentioned however, his face darkens and his lips curl in disdain.

"What's the use of mentioning that?" he asks. "I am an anarchist. I only did my duty. I shot and killed the President and I am prepared to die. That's all."

At the conference of counsel today, the insanity plea, as a measure of defense, will be fully discussed and in view of the conduct of the prisoner, that is the only theory of defense that is tenable. He will be examined today by several experts.

District Attorney Penny arrived at his office today. He denied himself to all callers.

From what can be gleaned in the vicinity of the district attorney's office, swift and sure will be the justice meted out to the assassin. No lengthy hypothetical questions, no interminable quibbling over the technicalities are calculated to mark the treatment of this case. Czolgosz will be accorded a fair trial, but no time will be wasted. It was said this morning by one in a position to know, that the trial of the case would not occupy more than three days, possibly not more than two.

About 15 witnesses will be sworn for the state. These include all those whose testimony procured by indictment by the grand jury. The state hopes to complete the presentation of its case in a day or a day and a half.

SAYS HE WAS ROBBED BUT WAS ARRESTED.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Sept. 20.—Thos. Ridgely of the Adams Express company, created a sensation this morning by saying that he had been sand bagged and robbed. Today he was arrested, charged with the embezzlement of $178, the amount which he said he was robbed of.

CORTELYOU TO REMAIN.

Washington, Sept. 20.—Cortelyou is to remain secretary to the President. It is understood that Mr. Loeb, who has been Roosevelt's secretary will be made assistant secretary.

FIRST

OFFICIAL ACT OF NEW PRESIDENT TODAY

Washington, Sept. 20.—The first official act performed by the new President was the signing of the commission of Brigadier General James M. Bell, which was done at about 11:40 this morning. In accepting Colonel Bell to the grade of Brigadier General, President Roosevelt gives the first proof of his announced intention to carry out the wishes of his predecessor.

The most important topic discussed by the cabinet this morning was the electoral law formulated by the Cuban Constitutional convention of which, it is understood, the President's advisors expressed their approval.

BRYAN SUGGESTS CURE FOR ANARCHY.

LINCOLN, NEB., Sept. 20.—In an expression on the assassination of President McKinley which will appear in today's "Commoner", W. J. Bryan suggests what he believes would be a cure for anarchy. He says:

"Stern measures must be invoked for the suppression and punishment of every manifestation of anarchistic spirit, but beyond this remedy there must be education. All must be taught that government is an absolute necessity and that our form government is the best ever devised. Then our government must be made as good as intelligence and patriotism can make it."

"Let a man believe that he is being fairly treated by his government and he will endure most anything, but let him feel that he is being unjustly dealt with and even a slight wrong will rankle in his bosom."

"While we are legislating to prevent any manifestation of the anarchistic spirit on American soil, we should avoid those things which breed anarchy. Partiality in government kindles discontent, the exaltation of money above human rights, the fattening of a few at the expense of the many, the making of artificial distinctions between citizens and the lessening of the sacredness of human life."

"We can only bring absolute security to our public servants by making the government so just and so beneficent that every citizen will be willing to give his life if need be, to preserve it to posterity."

TRIBUTE

TO THE MEMORY OF THE LATE PRESIDENT

THE EXPRESSION OF SYMPATHY WAS WORLD-WIDE.

MEMORIAL SERVICES THURSDAY

Were Held in Every Country Under the Sun—Eminent Persons Extolling the Virtues of Third Married President—A Flood of Tribute—Funeral Day Observed Everywhere.

Princeton, N. J., Sept. 20.—Memorial services were held in the First Presbyterian church. Addresses were delivered by ex-President Cleveland and others. Mr. Cleveland said in part: "The death of our lamented president and the solemnities that followed it have especially touched me. I recall with sharp distinctness when the man we today mourn came from his home to receive on a surrender from his hands the great office to which he had been elected, as an incident which is interesting. As we sat side by side amid the cheers of many thousands of his rejoicing fellow citizens and friends, while he acknowledged these greetings in the most friendly manner, he wore the sober expression that plainly showed his thought was on the solemn things that awaited him. I shall never forget his manner when I turned to me and said, 'what an impressive thing it is to assume tremendous responsibilities.' I recall our parting at the White House. As he his hand and wished for him the greatest measure of success, I added 'and I hope, Mr. President, when your term ends, you will not have all the reasons that I now have to welcome retirement.'"

Washington, Sept. 20.—Twenty years after the death of Garfield the nation's capital was again in mourning; the wheels of government were locked and the voices of people were uplifted in prayer for the soul of William McKinley, while his mortal remains were being committed to the tomb in his Ohio home. There was no need of a proclamation to ensure a proper observance of the sad event. Everywhere were to be seen badges of mourning, and on every flag staff the ensign was at half mast. Private and public business was absolutely suspended, and every face showed signs of sadness. The city gave evidence in most impressive manner that its heart was with Canton in the solemn hour of President McKinley's funeral.

Bryan on McKinley.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 20.—Memorial services for the dead president were held at the Lindell auditorium, into which over 5,000 crowded. Hon. W. J. Bryan and others made addresses. Mr. Bryan said no man appreciates more than himself the private character and public services and virtue of William McKinley. He concluded as follows: "It is unfortunate that in the best of political controversy partisanship sometimes becomes so strong as to cause injustice to be done the motives of political opinion, and it should be our constant aim to place our campaigns upon so high a plane that personalities will be eliminated and the issues made to turn in the principles involved."

Wireless Hushed.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—One feature a absolutely unique in history characterized the McKinley obsequies. It was the silencing of the telegraph. Never before since electricity was first put to use as a means of communication has there taken place, it is said, anything paralleling it even in a small way. Upon orders from the officials of the different telegraph companies or upon the common impulse of the operators where instructions were not received, the entire telegraph system of the United States was suddenly hushed for five minutes, at 2:30 p. m., the hour set for lowering the president's body into the grave at Canton.

Memorial at Paris.

Paris, Sept. 20.—A memorial service was held in honor of President McKinley at the American church on the Avenue de l'Alma. The attendance included the United States ambassador, Horace Porter, and the staff of the United States consulate; Consul General Gowdy and the staff of the United States consulate; Colonel Meaux de St. Marc, representing President Loubet; M. Caillaux, the minister of finance, the only cabinet minister in Paris; representatives of the foreign office and other ministries.

Southern Sympathy.

Memphis, Sept. 20.—Reports from many cities and towns in Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and Mississippi say that memorial services in honor of President McKinley were held and that business generally was suspended throughout the south. Nearly all southern railroads paid tribute to the dead by ordering a cessation of work at the time appointed for the funeral. Trains were brought to a standstill for SEEKING CLEWS AGAINST GOLDMAN.

EMMA GOLDMAN.

VIENNA, Sept. 20.—According to today's Neues Wiener Journal, the police have unearthed considerable of the past history of Emma Goldman, the anarchist writer, who is now held in default of $20,000 bail in Chicago on a charge of complicity in the assassination of President McKinley. The record discovered by the police, the paper says, is as follows: When she was but twelve years old, she was connected with the assassination of Alexander II, of Russia. She afterwards lived at a celebrated American general's house. In 1893 and 1894 she was a student in Vienna under the name of Emma Brady. In 1895 and 1896 she contributed to the New York World and in the latter year became a certified midwife.

The Buffalo police, despite many rebuffs are striving hard to forge the links which will connect Emma Goldman, the woman anarchist, with the attack upon the President.

Bad Wreck

Boston, Mass., Sept. 20.—A collision occurred on the Boston and Albany road this morning. Three persons are reported killed and 21 injured.

TODAY'S MARKET.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Today's market closed: September wheat 71½; corn 58½; oats 34½; January pork $16.35.

Ex-President John K. Cowen, now general manager of the B. & O., is still confined to his home at Baltimore suffering from nervous prostration.

REUNION.—A number of veterans left for Alexandria today to attend the reunion of the 112th regiment.

NO FIRE.—An alarm of fire called the department to box 22 this afternoon. No fire.

Roosevelt in Washington.

Washington, Sept. 20.—President Roosevelt arrived here at 9:20 this morning with Secretary Cortelyou. More policemen than spectators were on hand to greet him. He was driven direct to the White House. A cabinet meeting will be held today.

Today's meeting of the cabinet was informal. President Roosevelt intends to acquaint himself as soon as possible with all the details of state. He will listen to views of each member and will hear from each the most important problem coming before his particular department. Thus he will be able to gain in a short time a good idea of what is going on.

TIN WORKERS TO ORGANIZE.

Mr. J. K. Dewey, bookkeeper in the Franklin bank, was married at 6:30 o'clock Wednesday evening in Cincinnati, to Miss Olive Adam of that city. Mr. and Mrs. Dewey came to Newark yesterday evening and will make their home at the corner of Fourth and Chestnut streets. Mr. Dewey is a very capable and popular young man. He was graduated at Denison University last June.

RIXEY

SPEAKS OF MRS. MCKINLEY'S CONDITION.

WELL AS COULD BE EXPECTED UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES.

THE TREATMENT IN HER CASE

Will Be To Keep Her Mind Off the Death of Her Husband—"We Are Going to Convince Her That She Must Look After Her Estate and Thus Keep Her Mind Occupied."

Canton, O., Sept. 20.—Mrs. McKinley has not collapsed under the great strain she has been under for the last two weeks. Her condition is unchanged and Colonel Bingham, the White House military attaché, said she was doing as well as could be expected.

A break down may come at any time. Her friends and physicians would not be surprised by it. They are more surprised that the collapse has not come. She was alone with the body of her husband nearly all day yesterday, not leaving it until a few minutes before it was borne from the house. She was more composed after it was taken away than anybody had expected her to be, but it is probable that her mind did not fully grasp the tragic event.

Dr. Rixey's great fear now is that the powerful medicines which have been administered will cease to act upon her. There is also danger in administering any greater quantity, so that Dr. Rixey has to face graver questions in the future than he has in the past.

More Encouraging Report.

Dr. Rixey said: "Mrs. McKinley is better physically today than she has been in ten years. She is doing as well as any woman could be expected to do under such trying circumstances. The treatment in her case will be to keep her mind off her loss. We are going to convince her she must look after her estate and thus keep her mind occupied."

CUBAN TEACHERS.

It is a good sign that so many Cuban teachers are seeking normal instruction in the United States. Last summer, through the liberality and efforts of the Boston people, several hundred spent several weeks in educational work in the United States. The liner Morro Castle brought this week 34 ladies who are going to take a year's course at the State Normal school at New Paltz, Ulster county, N. Y. All the expenses of the teachers are being paid by the Cuban government, and besides that they are getting while here $20 a month each. After taking the course at New Paltz they will be paid $70 a month each. Let them come. It is the best investment the new republic of Cuba can make.

OUR POLITICAL DIVISIONS.

The death of President McKinley and the succession of President Roosevelt affords no good reason for accepting governmental policies, to which great numbers of the American people are opposed, because they were advocated by the late President or may be championed by the new President. The Philadelphia North American, representing the views of John Wanamaker, who was postmaster general under President Harrison, discussing this point, well says:

"Only a very extraordinary kind of fool can be made to believe that because a murderous wretch has taken the life of the President it becomes everybody's patriotic duty to cease criticizing the trusts, cease discussing the problem of poverty and the dangers threatening the Republic through the rapid growth of enormous fortunes which have their roots in monopoly." Or it might be further said, opposing imperialism and colonialism, to which President Roosevelt is committed in a more radical degree than was his predecessor.

President McKinley's last speech at Buffalo, advocating reciprocity in trade with other nations, was a long step in the opposite direction from the doctrine of high wall protection. The advocates of tariff reform have reason for congratulation that the late President took the strong stand he did in favor of reciprocity and freer trade. The President's untimely death, therefore, will not cause any tariff reformer to change or modify the views he has previously entertained on this great question. His faith is more likely to be strengthened.

AMUSEMENTS.

At W. Martin's superb scenic and spectacular revival of Uncle Tom's Cabin which will be seen at the Auditorium tonight, promises to be the theatrical treat in every sense of the word. The company numbers about one hundred people, seventy of whom are negroes from the Sunny South, who were engaged by Mr. Martin to fill out the many pretty pictures of the play and present their famous dances, songs and plantation "shines." Thirty head of horses, ponies, donkeys, bur-ros, oxen and fifteen Siberian blood-hounds are also carried. The scenery is said to be far beyond expectation.

Rosebraugh that on the night of Monday, September 23 he would present
the grand and sterling tragedian Mr.
Robert B. Mantel, under the management of M. W. Hanley, in an elaborate production of "Hamlet." This organization, which is reputed to be the strongest in tragic roles in this country, has received nothing but the highest praise for this production and its appearance here will be the theatrical event of the season.

IN SILENT TOMB

Further Details of the Last Act Recently Performed for the Late President.

Canton, O., Sept. 20.—With majestic solemnity, surrounded by his countrymen and his townspeople, in the presence of the president of the United States, the cabinet, justices of the United States supreme court, senators and representatives in congress, the heads of the military and naval establishments, the governors of states and a great concourse of people who had known and loved him, all that is mortal of the third president to fall by an assassin's bullet was committed to the grave.

It was a spectacle of mournful grandeur. From every city and hamlet in Ohio, from the remote corners of the south and from the east and west, the human tide flowed into the town until 100,000 people were within its gates, here to pay their last tribute to the fallen chief.

The final scenes at the First Methodist church, where the funeral service was held, and at the beautiful West-lawn cemetery, where the body was consigned to a vault, were simple and impressive. The funeral procession was very imposing and included not only the representatives of the army and navy of the United States, but the entire military strength of the state of Ohio and hundreds of civic, fraternal and other organizations. It was two miles long.

One of the most pathetic features of the day was the absence of Mrs. Mc-Kinley from the funeral services at the church and cemetery when the body of her husband was laid to rest.
The day found her too weak to pass through the trials of the final ceremonies.

No greater reverence was ever shown to any man than was exhibited toward the dead president. As the funeral car passed through the streets men and women

Sobbed Convulsively,
and at the cemetery gates, where the crowd was densely packed and where the people had remained for hours pressing against the iron fence, two women fainted during the exercises at the vault. It was a wonderful tribute of surpassing love that was rendered in his native place to the memory of William McKinley, and it will be long before greater or more reverent honor is paid to any man.

It was exactly four minutes after 4 when the funeral car bore the remains of the dead president through the gateway of his last resting place.
Twenty minutes after that time the brief services at the vault were over, the members of the family and distinguished men of the nation, who had come so far to do him honor, had passed through the gates on their homeward way. One hour and 40 minutes after the hearse had entered the cemetery the place was clear and the dead president was resting alone under the regular army. A century's measured tread resounded from the cement sidewalk before the vault, another clerk riled on the grassy slope above and at the head and at the foot of the casket stood armed men. Before the door, which was not closed, was pictured the text of the guard, and there it will remain until the doors are closed Friday. Sentinels will then guard the vault every hour of the Day and Night

until the body has been borne to its final resting place.

Bishop Joyce of Minneapolis read the burial service of the Methodist church, slowly but in a voice that could be heard distinctly by all who were grouped about the vault. Eight buglers of the Canton band, who had taken station upon the side of the mound above and to the south of the vault. Instantly from the eight bugles rang out the notes of the soldier's last call. "Taps." It was beautifully done, and the last notes of the bugles died away so softly that all who heard it remained listening

For a Few Seconds
to hear if it was really ended. When the last note had floated away Secretary Wilson was in tears, Secretary Long was also weeping, and the president was gazing grimly at the sidewalk. It was the last moment for the men who had been so closely associated with the president for so long, and the thought seemed sadder than most of them could bear. It was all ended at last.

Nature has been kind in selecting the last resting place for President McKinley. Westlawn cemetery is on a high knoll, overlooking the peaceful valley, with the busy little city of Canton laid out below. If it were not for an intervening church spire, one might get from this elevation a glimpse of the McKinley home. Here, looking out on his native city and his native state, the body of William Mc-Kinley is laid to rest.

At 7 p. m. President Roosevelt and the members of the cabinet started back to Washington.

Bank Robbed.

Cedar Rapids, Ia., Sept. 20.—The bank at Shellsburg was broken into,
the safe blown open with dynamite and about $2,700 in cash secured. The burglars left on a handcar in the direction of this city. Four men are suspected. Posses are now scouring the country in pursuit.

Hanged in Effigy.

Kenosha, Wis., Sept. 20.—At the celebration of McKinley memorial service Czolgosz, the assassin, was hanged in effigy. About 1,000 persons, among whom were many prominent citizens, participated in the demonstration.

Delaney.

The parties are colored and became involved in an argument at the Klondyke saloon Thursday night, and Faucet struck Delaney over the head with a billiard cue.

There was one drunk and two sleepers at the city prison Thursday night.

Pass Resolutions Commemorative of the Death of the Murdered President, Wm. McKinley.

At the regular meeting of Cedar Camp, M. W. A., 4727, Wednesday evening, September 18, 1901, a committee was appointed to draft resolutions on the death of our late President, Wm. McKinley.

The resolutions are as follows:
In view of the death of our beloved President, Wm. McKinley, whose life was brought to a tragic and sudden end by the deadly hand of an assassin, the American people have lost a citizen who served his country well, first as a soldier, then as a wise counselor and statesman and last of all as chief executive, be it

Resolved, That we as a society express our deep felt sorrow in this hour of national affliction. The American people are conscious of having lost a brother and a friend whose heart beat in love for them and whose deepest thought was always for their highest welfare. We recognize and revere the high ideal of manhood and American citizenship which he embodied in his noble life of words and deeds.

Resolved, That we bow in humble submission to the will of God, whose will the deceased ever sought to know and loved to do, who in the last conscious moment of his life said "It is God's way, His will be done."

Resolved, That we pronounce this crime the blackest of modern times and denounce in strongest language the spirit of anarchy which would destroy so good and noble a man as Wm. McKinley in the hour of his greatest usefulness as President of the greatest and freest nation on earth.

Resolved, That although dead, yet he speaketh. By his Christian faith and courage, his fidelity to duty, his devotion to the highest interest of his countrymen, his pure and unselfish life and his love for his afflicted wife, he will continue to inspire to noble achievement and better life all true Americans.

Resolved, That we extend our sympathy to his bereaved wife in her great trial.

The Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Church Will Meet Next Year.

The closing session of the thirty-first annual convention of the District Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church was held in the First M. E. church, this city, on Thursday evening. The meeting was presided over by Mrs. T. R.
Taylor, the District President.

The principal address of the evening was delivered by Rev. Charles Chandler, pastor of the Second street
M. E. church of Zanesville. Miss Mougey of Mahta, read a very interesting paper on "Missionary Giving," and Mrs. Waugh of Delaware, O., who is a returned missionary from India, delivered a fine address. The solos rendered by Mrs. Charles Chandler and Misses Dorney and Eva Mossbrook and Mr. Ernest Wall of this city, were all very beautiful and greatly enjoyed by the audience. The convention adjourning to meet in September of next year in the Second Street M. E. church at Zanesville.

Mrs. Austin has just come to town.

WOOD ON CUBA

Election in the Island to be Held in December—Evacuation Takes Place Next Summer.

Washington, Sept. 20.—General Leonard Wood, accompanied by his secretary, Alex. Gonzales, has arrived in Washington. While here he will have conferences with President Roosevelt and with Secretary Root, and will start on his return trip Saturday. The business which calls General Wood to the city at this time is to submit to Secretary Root the new electoral law adopted by the constitutional convention. General Wood said: "There will be elected a president and a vice president; a civil governor and council for each of the six provinces. The national legislative body will consist of four senators from each province and 61 representatives.
The selection of a president and a vice president will be made by electors, of whom there will be about 122 in all.
The senators all will be chosen by the electors nominated for that purpose. A general election probably will be held in December, and I think the island can be turned over to the Cubans themselves by next May or June."

Czar in France.

Compiegne, Sept. 20.—Emperor
Nicholas passed a day full of interest.
The morning was spent in witnessing the final operations of the grand western maneuvers, at which the czar for the first time came in contact with the French army operating under war conditions and not merely in parade uniform. Over 140,000 troops participated in the marvelous maneuvers. When the czar requested that he be shown the new French field gun, which had never before been shown to a foreigner, one of a battery of four was taken to him. He examined the mechanism.
Then the gun was put together and eight shots were fired with marvelous rapidity. In order to demonstrate the absence of recoil, the gunners sat on the carriage during the firing. The czar expressed his admiration of the astonishing qualities of the weapon.

Another Battle.

Willemstad, Island of Curacao,
Sept. 20.—The Dutch cruiser Semmelidijk arrived from La Hacha, where she left at 8 p. m. Sept. 16. She brought a number of Dutchmen who were desirous of leaving La Hacha.
The refugees say fighting between the Colombian liberals and the allied Venezuelan troops against the Colombian government troops occurred Sept. 13 and 14 in the suburbs of La Hacha, and that the Venezuelans and Columbian liberals were defeated, especially in the engagement of Sept. 14, at a place called Curruzo, near La Hacha.
The number of casualties and prisoners captured is not known, but is reported to be considerable.

Shaffer's Statement.

Pittsburg, Sept. 20.—President Shaffer of the Amalgamated Association was seen and asked when his looked for statement would be made. In reply he said it would hardly be issued before Saturday. He has been working on it every moment possible, he says, and predicts that when the workers and public are made aware of the real condition his course will be indorsed by all. The conditions already published, he says, are all wrong and far from the truth.

Wellington Explains.

Washington, Sept. 20.—Dr. W. A.
Croft of this city has received a letter from Senator Wellington of Maryland in which the senator says he gave no interview to the newspapers expressing indifference to the shooting of President McKinley, but refused again and again to say anything for publication. "For the reason that McKinley had done me such injury as I could never forgive, and I felt that it would be better to say nothing at this time."

Newark Papers Lead.

The Newark Daily papers have not been a bit behind their Columbus contemporaries in giving the very latest news during the past week. In fact we noticed, on several different occasions of late, that the county-seat papers led those of the state capital by a head—Pataskala Standard.

What's Better Than Home Indorsement?

Mr. E. T. Johnson, Newark, O.

Dear Sir:—My wife suffered for 10 years with Rheumatism and gradually became worse. Tried different doctors and various remedies without relief. One day some two or three years ago a friend told her of your preparation, RHEUMATOL.

TOL. After using eight small bottles, (it was then put up in 50c size) all rheumatism disappeared, and has never returned. Not only did it cure Rheumatism, but a severe case of Eczema of 20 years standing. A dreadful case it was the sores and scabs spreading over back part of neck into the hair. Several doctors treated her for this malady but no relief of any consequence until RHEUMATOL was used.

This Rheumatol cured Mrs. Brandt of Eczema as well as Rheumatism and neither has returned during this entire period of nearly 3 years, for which my wife and I are sincerely grateful, and we heartily recommend RHEUMATOL to any one suffering from Rheumatism or Eczema.

L. W. BRANDT, Councilman from 7th Ward.

ERNEST T. JOHNSON, DRUGGIST, No. 10 South Second St.

commanded the Massachusetts as a part of the flying squadron then, of the North Atlantic squadron, through the war.

The flying squadron proceeded to Key West, arriving there in May. Thence May 19, to Cienfuegos, on the south side of Cuba. The Texas, Massachusetts, Brooklyn, Eagle, composed the fleet so far as he could remember. The trip from Key West to Cienfuegos was made at full speed, the fleet arriving May 22. It approached within two or three miles of the Cuban coast. The squadron remained at Cienfuegos until May 24, near sundown. "I ask you to state fully what was done by the commander-in-chief, Schley, to discover the Spanish fleet."

Nothing, to my knowledge. I saw nothing. I understood that he received information from Captain McCalla.

The witness said that McCalla obtained news of Short and communicated it to Schley May 24, as near as he could remember. Asked what was done to destroy the battery on shore he replied, "Nothing that I know of. We had no engagement."

Witness Higginson described the maneuvers of the American navy on May 25 and 29, 1898, when the Spanish fleet was discovered in Santiago harbor. He said the port was blockaded night and day by Schley, who gave general orders for close action if the ships of the enemy came out, though the Colon could have been destroyed in the harbor where she lay in full sight if Schley had so desired.

Higginson added when Lemay asked, "Was there any sheltered place near Santiago where coaling might be done?" "Yes, Guantanamo, forty miles east." "Was every effort incumbent upon Schley made by him to capture or destroy the Colon as she lay at the entrance of Santiago harbor between May 26 and May 31?" "I think not."

Then the court adjourned for an hour.

MISS FAINSWORTH

Frank Harwood fell in love with a portrait. He tried to buy it, but was told that it was left to gain orders for an artist. He at once noted the artist's address.

Young Harwood had been brought up by his aunt, who had given him great freedom, except in one particular. She insisted that he should marry Miss Fainsworth. He declined positively even to meet her.

Going to the artist's studio, he knocked and was admitted.

"Mr. Brand, I believe?"

The occupant, an invalid with death written in his hollow eyes, on his blue veined hands, bowed assent.

"I came," said Harwood, declining the solitary chair which was proffered him, "about the picture exhibited in Mercer's window. It is not for sale?"

"No, sir."

"Not at a large figure?"

The artist did not at once answer. He was ill and very poor.

"Not at any price," he said.

"You could not make me a copy?"

"No, sir. The truth of the matter is this: The young lady who consented to sit for me for that picture did so out of her own sweet charity. She is so beautiful and makes such a fine study I fancied her face would bring me orders, where one less lovely, even if admirable as a likeness, would fail. I need not enumerate to you the reasons why it would be dishonorable for me to abuse her kindness."

"I understand your reasons, Mr. Brand, and respect them. May I give you an order for a life sized pastel from this photograph?"

He had fortunately remembered having in his pocket the picture of a nephew that morning received. The commission would help the poor artist.

A light tap came to the door.

"May I come in, Vincent?" called a sweet voice.

The door opened. Frank Harwood turned to look into the face that had haunted him waking and sleeping, but a thousand times faster than the colored crayons had reproduced it.

She half drew back at the sight of the stranger, but Brand called to her.

"Come in, Claire." And then, with youthful candor, "This gentleman was just asking about your portrait."

She bowed slightly. She was all in rich furs and deep, glowing velvet. The elegance of her attire puzzled Frank Harwood.

"I hope the picture is bringing you orders, Vincent."

"It is, indeed," he answered brightly.

"Well, it is late. I must go. I just ran in to see how you were getting on."

He smothered in a fit of coughing.

"You have the carriage?"

"No. I am on foot."

"I shall see you home then," the artist said, looking troubled. "This is not the best neighborhood in the world, and it is growing dark."

The fierce cough shook him again.

"You shall do nothing of the kind," she said peremptorily.

Harwood went forward, but in hand.

"Will you do me the honor of permitting me to accompany you? I am sorry I have not a card. My name is Frank Harwood."

She had been listening with a somewhat haughty air. She smiled now with sudden friendliness.

"I shall be glad if you will come with me," she said simply.

On their way she told him about Brand, whom she had known from childhood. "He is dying," she said.

"It is hard to help him, he is so proud."

The house before which she paused was a magnificent one.

Harwood mustered courage to ask if he might call.

"No," she said gently, and then, as if repenting, "I shall be at Brand's studio on Friday."

She ran up the steps.

Needless to say Harwood was in the painter's room early on Friday afternoon. The number of orders he gave quite overwhelmed the artist.

She came at last, her face like a rose over her dark furs.

They met, not quite by chance, many times, and still Frank did not learn her name. He called her Miss Claire.

One evening, when he was leaving the studio with her, he told her the story of how he had first happened to come there.

"I fell in love with a pastel portrait," he said. "I am today in love with the original. But I know so little of you it seems like being in love with a spirit. Are you going to punish my presumption or reward my daring?"

She indicated her carriage that stood at the curb.

"Get in," she said, smiling. "I chance to be driving your way."

The vehicle stopped at his aunt's door.

"Do you know my aunt?" he began. Just then his aunt came forward them.

"Claire, my dear!" she cried. "Frank, where did you meet Miss Fainsworth?"

"Fainsworth!" he repeated blankly.

"You"—he reproached Claire—"knew me all the time!"

"Do you think I would have let you see me home that night if I did not?" she asked archly.

"What in the world are you children talking about?" Frank's aunt questioned.

They only laughed.

But there was that in the lovely eyes raised to his which told him he might plead again and not in vain.

Not on the Map.

"What place are you looking for, Willie?" he inquired.

The small boy knit his brows and traced a circuitous route with his forefinger before he answered earnestly, "Twisting to find Christendom."

GREGG REUNION

At Family Residence Near Fallsburg. Was an Enjoyable Affair—Those From Other Places.

The annual reunion of the Gregg family and near relatives was held at the residence of Mrs. Gregg one mile north of Fallsburg, O., on Saturday, the 14th inst., and was a very enjoyable occasion.

During the past year, Mr. Gregg, the husband and father, had been called to his last long home, not only leaving a vacant chair but a true Christian example which the wife and children have accepted as their choice.

There were 75 or 80 guests present and the following places were represented: Mr. Wolf and family of West Carlisle, Mr. Wright and family of Coshocton, Mrs. Thomas of Frazeyburg, Mr. Gregg, Mr. Hull and wife and Mr. E. Gregg of Newark, Mr. Hobbs and family of St. Louisville, Miss Gregg and friend of Utica, and several from Fallsburg and vicinity.

Rev. T. J. Gregg and wife having just finished their year's labor at Scott, Ohio, while on their journey to Boston, Mass., to take a thorough course in a theological college, stopped over in the city for a short visit with friends and attended the reunion, and their presence added much to the pleasure of the day, and they take with them the best wishes of all.

Mrs. Lucy Frost a sister of Mrs. Gregg and the writer of this notice, was the oldest person present, having reached her 76th milestone of life's journey that day.

The day was a beautiful one, and the tables were spread on the lawn, and Oh, such a feast. Surely the fatted calf had been killed and all the guests were merry.

The social intercourse was again resumed, but soon the sun was sinking in the west and we reluctantly took our leave of each other, hoping that it would be God's will that we all be spared to meet with Mrs. Gregg on a similar occasion a year hence.

Resolutions on the President's Death Prepared by a Special Committee of Three.

The following resolutions prepared by a committee from three soldier organizations will be presented for adoption to the U. V. L. and S. A. W. V., the G. A. R. having taken action on the report last night.

Whereas, William McKinley, President of the United States of America, and one of the most renowned men of modern times has passed from our midst to the great beyond,

Resolved, That we unite with all the good people of all lands in our appreciation of his great character, and in common with them, mourn his departure from this world in which he has done so much to ennoble humanity, and

Whereas, He was a splendid type of the American soldier of the Civil war, and was the great Commander-in-Chief of the American Army during the late Spanish-American war,

Resolved, That we, his comrades of two grandly successful wars, do in our hearts bid him a soldier's farewell to earth, and that we will ever rejoice in the great victories he has achieved in peace and war, and

That we fully recognize his fine moral character and intellectual greatness, and

That we ask the young men of America to make him their model for home life, for citizenship and for soldierly duty to our beloved flag, and

That we extend to his noble widow that sympathy which can be given only by soldiers to widows and orphans of their most beloved commanders, and

Whereas, Our comrade in chief was assassinated by the hand of anarchy,

Resolved, That we urgently request our legislators to create such laws as shall make it impossible for anarchy in any form to exist, and that we ask our general government to co-operate with all foreign governments in the total eradication of this evil and menace to every form of good government.

Universal Sympathy.

London, Sept. 20.—The London papers again appear with black borders and long accounts of the ceremonies in Canton, and of memorial services throughout the world. The editorials generally comment upon the widespread sympathy evoked. "Seldom, if ever," says The Standard, "has a common sorrow found expression in so many lands."

At Santiago.

Santiago de Cuba, Sept. 20.—A memorial service was held at the Oriental theater in honor of the late President McKinley. The hall is the largest auditorium in the city, and it was packed with people. All the American officers wore full uniform and side arms. A troop of cavalry from Morro castle, the municipal officers, the foreign consuls, the judges, students to state institutions, employees of the sanitary department, the entire American colony and thousands of Cubans of all classes were present, notwithstanding the fact that it was raining heavily.

At St. Petersburg.

St. Petersburg, Sept. 20.—Under the auspices of the United States ambassador, Charlemagne Tower, impressive memorial services in honor of President McKinley were held in the British-American church. The pastor, the Rev. Alexander Francis, officiated, assisted by Drs. Kean, Kilburn and Key. Among those present was the Grand Duke Vladimir Alexandrovitch, the Grand Duchess Maria Pavlovna and the Grand Duke Boris Vladimirovitch, their son, and the Grand Duke Serge Michaelovitch.

Emma Goldman Unmoved.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Emma Goldman attended memorial services held in honor of President McKinley. It was not of her own volition that she was present at demonstration of sorrow, and the course that she followed during the services appeared to show lack of sympathy with the spirit of the occasion. The ceremonies at which Miss Goldman was present were held in the woman's ward of the county jail. Miss Goldman alone remained unmoved when the hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee," was sung by the prisoners.

Foraker Spoke.

Cincinnati, Sept. 20.—A public memorial service was held in Music hall, with the aisles full and all standing room taken. The dropping of a pin could have been heard at any time, especially during the prayer of Dr. Clark and the address of Senator Foraker. There were those in the audience who had heard Senator Foraker present McKinley's name to two state conventions for governor and two national conventions for president, but he was never so eloquent at any convention as in his funeral oration.

Chinese Pay Tribute.

San Francisco, Sept. 20.—A noticeable feature of the day was the complete suspension of business by the Chinese merchants. Every store in the Chinese quarter was closed.

ASSASSIN

Used a Woman's Handkerchief to Cover His Revolver as He Shot President McKinley.

Chicago, Sept. 20.—Locked up in a heavily barred vault in Captain Porter's private office, in the quarters occupied by the secret service bureau, according to Detective Gallagher, is the handkerchief in which Anarchist Czolgosz concealed his revolver when firing the shots that killed President McKinley. The tragic relic was brought to Chicago from Buffalo by Gallagher, who is attached to the Chicago branch of the secret service. It will be taken later on to the trial of the assassin at Buffalo, to be used, together with the Czolgosz revolver, as evidence before the jury which tries the case. A study of the piece of cloth since its receipt by Captain Porter has led to the startling discovery that it is a woman's handkerchief, and about 10 inches square.

Possible Clue.

Des Moines, Sept. 20.—On the person of a wounded prisoner, an anarchist, the police have found a letter mailed from Los Angeles two weeks before the shooting of President McKinley that promises to furnish a clue to a conspiracy. The letter contains two printed circulars, a strange mixture of letters and figures. They have been but partially translated. Some expressions already deciphered are: "Beast of Buffalo exposition," "Lincoln's assassin," "whatever happened is to be repeated," "real anarchist known only to Lewes, the light."

Deluge of Flowers.

Canton, O., Sept. 20.—Never before on this continent has such a floral display been seen at any public occasion as that in Westlawn cemetery. The vault was lined with the rarest and costliest flowers, a multitude of floral pieces was spread on the ground before the door of the vault, and for 100 feet to the right and left of the doorway and for half as many feet to the rear of a line passing through the front wall it was impossible to tread, so thickly did the tributes lie. Nearly every country on both hemispheres was represented by an offering. The number of those from the United States is almost past counting. They

JOHN BODLE'S SUICIDE.

Farmer Near Purity Hanged Himself With a Strap Thursday Morning—Had Been at One Time a Patient at Insane Asylum—Buried in Eden Cemetery.

John Bodle, residing about two miles northwest of Purity, committed suicide by hanging Thursday.

Mr. Bodle had been in poor health for some time past, but did not complain of feeling badly when he retired for the night Wednesday evening. The unfortunate man had been living with his aged mother on the old homestead, and was first missed by her when she went to call him for breakfast Thursday morning. Search was at once made for him and he was found hanging to a rafter in the barn. Bodle had taken a hitching strap and fastened it around his neck, then reaching as far out from the manger as he could, had tied the end of the strap around a beam.

His hands were tied in a loose knot behind him, and it is supposed, that after putting the strap around his neck he had secured his hands with the other piece of leather, so he would be unable to help himself in case his courage failed him at the last moment.

When found he was dead. "Squire George W. Marriott, Justice of the Peace of Eden township, was notified and acted as coroner, after which the body was taken down and removed to the house, where it was prepared for burial.

The dead man was aged about 40 years and was unmarried. He leaves besides a mother, two sisters and two brothers, to mourn. They are: Mrs. Phoebe Miller of Eden township, Lafayette Bodle of this city, and Jean and Mary Bodle, who reside at the old homestead.

About ten years ago, Bodle was, for several months, an inmate of the State Hospital for the Insane, and when he came home he vowed he would never return to that institution and it is thought that he took his life fearing that some day he would again lose his mind and be taken back to Columbus.

The funeral was held this morning from the Eden church in Eden township, and the remains were interred in the cemetery near the church.

When a British Torpedo Boat Exploded and Sank—Sad Disaster in the North Sea.

London, Sept. 20.—As the result of an explosion, the British torpedo boat destroyer Cobra foundered in the North Sea. The vessel had on board 79 souls. Of these only a dozen are reported to have been rescued. Later it became known that the Cobra had on board 42 naval men and about 35 men in the employ of the contractors, the Armstrongs of Newcastle. So far as known only the 12 men referred to have been saved, and it is still believed they are the only survivors. Five boats were launched after the Cobra struck, but some of them were swamped in the heavy sea which was running at the time.

The first intimation of the disaster was the arrival of a fishing boat with six bodies which she had picked up in the vicinity of the spot where the Cobra was last seen. According to the fishermen the Cobra was sighted by the lightship off Cowling Sands, enveloped in steam, and she shortly afterward disappeared.

A dispatch from Middlesboro says 12 survivors of the crew of the Cobra were landed there, and confirms the report that all the others were drowned. The British admiralty has received information that the explosion occurred after the Cobra struck a rock, and that she sank immediately. The Cobra, like her sister boat, the Viper, was a turbine-engine vessel. She had just left the yard of her contractors and was undergoing a boiler test.

Lieutenant Bosworth Smith, the Cobra's commander, stood on the bridge with his arms folded as impassive as if on parade, and went down with the vessel. About one year ago the torpedo boat destroyer Cobra beat the record of the Viper and won the title of the fastest vessel in the world. The record of the Viper, which was afterwards wrecked, was 43 miles an hour, while the Cobra, in an unofficial trial over the same course as that sailed by the Viper, at the mouth of the Tyne, made 37.7 knots, or 43.5 miles.

WOMAN

Wrote the Beautiful Hymn "Nearer, My God, to Thee," Published in Year 1841.

New York, Sept. 20.—The hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," which President McKinley made famous in his dying hour, has an interesting history. It is said to be the best metrical expression in modern psalmody of the desire for a more intimate spiritual acquaintance with God.

Its imaginary embraces the associations of one of the most sublime and interesting religious experiences recorded in the early Hebrew scriptures, Jacob's vision at Luz. "And he lighted upon a certain place," said the scripture of Jacob's wanderings, "and tarried there all night, because the sun was set; and he took of the stones of that place and put them for his pillow, and lay down in that place to sleep. And he dreamed, and beheld a ladder set upon the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it."

Mrs. Sarah Flower Adams, author of the hymn, was a daughter of Benjamin Flower, an English writer and editor. She was born in 1805.

In 1841 she published a dramatic poem in five acts entitled "Viva Perpetua," in which she portrayed the experiences of the early martyrs.

The hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," was a record of her own religious experience, and was written as a memorial of answered prayer, probably without any expectation that it would be of public service. It was furnished with 13 other hymns to Charles Fox's "Collection of Hymns and Anthems," published in London in 1841.

garding the latest report that she is to wed an English nobleman Miss Morgan said the other day: "I have never heard such a report. Marriage is farthest from my thoughts. I am proud of my father and of the success he has made in the world. I would rather be known as his daughter than share the throne of any court in Europe."

Faure and Gingerbread Portraits.

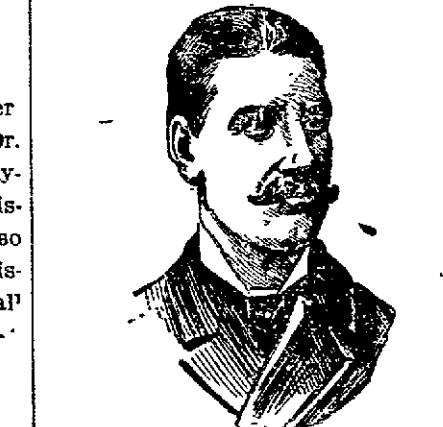

Appropos of the observations on men and things made by the late president of the French republic to the "chiel" who took notes, which are now being published, a good story is told by a writer who had it direct from the hero of this comical adventure. It was the custom for M. Felix Faure to invite the officer of the Elysee guard to déjeuner, and this particular gentleman felt very nervous when he took his seat at table. "During the first part of the meal," as he related, "everything went well. No one spoke to me, and I did not say anything. I was not even listening to the conversation, when suddenly M. Felix Faure, addressing me by my military title, asked me point blank, 'Am I popular?'" This was a very embarrassing question for the shy officer, who had never given the matter a thought, and he stammered out, "I do not think so, M. le President," feeling ready to sink into the earth as soon as the words were out of his mouth. "Why do you not think so?" Explain yourself," the president went on to inquire in a condescending tone. "Mon Dieu, I said, 'my father told me one day that he only realized M. Thiers' popularity when he saw his portrait in gingerbread in all the booths at the fair on the Place du Trocadero. I have not yet noticed your portrait in this guise, M. le President.' Then M. Felix Faure exclaimed very gravely: 'That's true. I thank you. I had not yet thought of that.' The gingerbread portraits were a revelation to him."

How Pinero Works.

A. W. Pinero, the English playwright, it is said by those acquainted with his habits, when beginning the building of a play locks himself in his study, gives the key to his servant and for a period, even though it is six months at a time, is never seen by even his closest friends. Though it cannot be said that he is imitating Pinero, Augustus Thomas also retires to some secluded place when he wants to work, deciding on the locality only a few hours before he goes away.

The Oldest "Immortal."

The oldest of the "immortals," or members of the French academy, is Legouez, who is ninety-four. The Paris Gaulois thinks that the best thing he has written is this: "It is often said that God condemned man to work. This is absurd. God condemned man to live and gave him work as a mitigating circumstance."

AT GRANVILLE

Memorial Day Thursday Was Observed With Appropriate Services—The Program.

Granville, O., Sept. 20.—Nowhere, perhaps, in the state, was a more fitting expression for her grief at the untimely death of President McKinley observed than there was in this little school town of Licking county. Not only were the colors of mourning over the village, and all business as far as possible suspended, but also the meeting at the Baptist church called to get her a concourse of people, such as had never before assembled in that edifice, to do honor to the departed dead.

In the morning the school children assembled and marched to Pearl street, where they were met by the Masons and the Knights of Pythias, headed by the Granville Cornet Band. The procession then proceeded to the Baptist church. It was a sad crowd, weighed down with a great grief, that assembled in the church to do honor to the nation's departed chieftain. After the members of the different orders and the children had all been seated, Miss M. Roberts, the organist, began the program by playing the funeral march by Beethoven. The choir, which was composed of representative members from the choirs of the Baptist, Methodist and Presbyterian churches, followed with a quiet and beautiful selection from Gunod.

Mr. E. M. Downer, as master of ceremonies, then introduced Rev. G. C. Leonard, who read a portion of scripture and offered a prayer. Following the prayer, "Lead, Kindly Light," was sung by the choir and the audience joined in with voices broken by emotion.

Resolutions of respect and condolence were then read by Rev. T. J. Sheppard, chairman of the committee on resolutions.

Rev. T. B. White of the Methodist church, delivered an address, his subject being "The President in His Church Relations," followed by an address by Rev. T. J. Sheppard.

Then followed the beautiful hymn "Some Day We'll Understand," the verses being sung by a quartet composed of Mrs. M. King, Miss Anna Cross, Mr. Ernest Sheppardson and Mr. H. M. Jackson, the full choir singing the chorus.

Rev. J. L. Wyly then spoke of the President from the soldier's standpoint, followed by Rev. C. J. Baldwin, who made the concluding address.

The choir and congregation then sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee," after which the services were closed, the benediction being pronounced by Rev. Dr. Baldwin.

"I feel that it would be a benefit for those with defective eyes to know the experience I have had with mine. For many years I have been nearly blind in one eye and the other was defective. Physicians decided they could do nothing for me and advised me to go to a very prominent oculist in Cleveland. After having examined my case he informed me that one eye was beyond all hope. He improved the sight of the other eye slightly with a glass, but the results were on the whole very unsatisfactory. Having consulted what was supposed to be the best talent in this country, I was forced to believe that I would have to live the balance of my life in comparative blindness, a thought quite horrifying to me. One day I happened into the office of our probate judge, who was having a pair of glasses fitted by Dr. J. N. Hoyt. The gratification and delight expressed by the judge when the doctor had completed the examination gave me a new ray of hope and I requested him to examine mine. In ten minutes he brought out the vision in both my eyes so that I could read the finest print at the proper distance with ease. I can see as clearly with the eye pronounced beyond all hope as though it had never been defective. How can I but feel grateful to Dr. Hoyt? I would say that he is one of those fortunate gentlemen who have made a correct selection of a profession, as he certainly is a born artist in his line. He is also a graduate of the Chicago Ophthalmic College and Hospital—a man of very extensive practice and an honorable gentleman.

HYMN

"Lead, Kindly Light" and the Unusual Circumstances Under Which it Was Composed.

The history of "Lead, Kindly Light," which yesterday was sung throughout the land in reverence to its dead admirer, is as solemn as the cloud cast over the people by the death of the President.

The lyric sentiment of this beautiful song was forced by the author, Cardinal John Henry Newman, while sick unto death, but fighting for life in order to perform a duty to England.

While away from college duties to recuperate from the perplexities of church Cardinal Newman was stricken with malignant fever on the island of Sicily. Here, in the strangeness of a foreign land, among historical sights and sublime scenes, with home and church in mind, but without news from either, he became so impaired in health as to be required by his servants to give final directions. He attempted to cross the Mediterranean in order to reach home, but was held in the Straits of Bonifacio in the fury of a storm that turned day into night, and there "amid the encircling gloom," the stanzas of "Lead, Kindly Light," were given to the world.

Martin Van Buren was the first President of Dutch ancestry and Roosevelt is the second. Washington, Adams, Madison, John Quincy Adams, William Henry Harrison, Tyler, Taylor, Fillmore, Pierce, Lincoln, Johnson, Garfield, Cleveland, Benjamin Harrison were of English ancestry; Jackson, Polk, Buchanan, Arthur and McKinley were Scotch-Irish, Monroe, Grant, Hayes were Scotch; Jefferson was Welsh. MEMORIAL DAY IN NEWARK.

Thousands of People Listen to The Addresses Delivered By Leading Citizens.

Full Text of the Addresses Delivered at Memorial Auditorium Thursday Afternoon-- Hall Wholly Inadequate to Accommodate the Crowd so an Outdoor Over-Flow Meeting Was Held.

The memorial services at the Auditorium Thursday afternoon in honor of the late martyred President, Wm. McKinley, were most solemn and impressive in their nature, and the grief that thrilled every heart found mute expression on the faces of both speakers and hearers.

The hall was appropriately decorated for the sad occasion. In the lobby, just at the entrance, a large photograph of the distinguished dead stood on an easel, draped in the national colors, draped in somber black. In the hall another large picture, similarly draped, was swung in front of the stage, while black streamers led from either side around the balconies and galleries. The entire service was of such a nature, that all present felt the solemnity of the moment, indeed a most sad one.

The music was in keeping with the intent of the meeting. The Buckeye Band opened with sacred melody, very creditably played. The vocal music was furnished by a quartet consisting of Mrs. Daisy Graves Miller, soprano; Mrs. Annis Lawhead, contralto; Geo. Weber, tenor; and Walter Ball, basso. When they rendered the two favorite hymns of the late President, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," in which the audience joined, and "Lead, Kindly Light," in a beautiful manner, there was hardly a dry eye in the house. Mr. E. G. Wall sang in a most tender way, "Abide With Me."

Not a particle of applause was noted, the oppressive silence being the most noble tribute to the dead statesman.

The meeting was called to order by Col. C. H. Kibler, who introduced Mr. J. A. Flory as the president of the afternoon.

Mr. Flory, in a few words, stated the object of the meeting, and prayer was offered by Rev. B. F. Patt, after which the audience joined with the quartet in singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

As announced yesterday, the Auditorium was wholly inadequate to accommodate the crowd so an overflow meeting was held in the court house park, where thousands listened to the same speakers who addressed the audience in Memorial hall.

The following are the addresses made during the afternoon:

MR. KIBLER

Address Delivered at Memorial Auditorium on Memorial Day by Hon. Edward Kibler.

This is the third time in less than forty years that we have been called upon to mourn the death of a murdered president.

Lincoln was slain at the culmination of a mighty struggle in which brother slew brother and the very foundations of constitutional government were assailed. Garfield was shot in an interval of profound peace by an assassin whose mind was probably deranged as the result of a controversy which was purely political. McKinley in a time of peace and general prosperity, perhaps the most beloved President since Lincoln, is struck down by the red hand of anarchy, at a time when the industrial conditions in this country furnish the least excuse for the existence of such repellent doctrines.

We meet today, as it were, around the president's open grave to express our grief, to mingle our tears, and to testify to our respect and admiration for the character and services of the distinguished dead. Today we know no political, no religious differences. These are properly cast aside and lost to view. As former political adversaries we are prepared, with all sincerity, to ascribe to the career of our fallen chief magistrate, the loftiest motives for the public welfare, exceptional force as a public man and many conspicuous virtues as a private citizen.

Perhaps history will regard as the three most distinguished features of President McKinley's administration, The Cuban War, his promotion of the Nicaraguan canal project, and his administrative policy as outlined in the address he made the day before he was shot. This has to an extent been lost sight of in the events which followed, but its importance cannot be underestimated, for it aims at making this country the trade master of the world. The Cuban war was unique because it was undertaken by this government out of purely humanitarian motives, and without hope of personal gain. The judgment of history will justify it.

Of McKinley as a public man it must be said that he has always been prominent and conspicuous. His promotion was brought about chiefly by his earnest and persistent advocacy of a high protective tariff as the commercial policy of this country, and his political opponents will quite generally concede that his tariff speeches were the most adroit and effective ever heard on the political platform.

Of McKinley as a man too much cannot be said. He was a man of clean life, able and honest and no monument of enduring granite erected to his memory can equal that more enduring one which he has carved unconsciously to himself in a lifetime of patient, loving devotion to his loved wife.

As indicated by the Pan-American address, it was the President's ambition during the remainder of his term, largely to extend and encourage the foreign trade and eventually to make the United States the virtual monarch of the seas. These great ambitions, so far as the execution of them by him are concerned, were rendered impossible by the cowardly act of Coolidge who was undoubtedly selected to perform this horrid deed. The time has come when we must drive this monster from our midst. We must not wait until another precious presidential life is sacrificed. Let us promptly and emphatically proclaim to the world that the United States is no longer a congenial asylum for the banished anarchists of foreign lands. We have carried this asylum idea a step too far. Let foreign anarchists hereafter in this country be welcomed to hospitable graves.

We ourselves should learn the lesson that between political campaigns at least we owe our chief magistrate a respect and support even if we be of different political faith, which are not to be expressed in wholesale denunciations, libellous cartoons and the like. We should show our disgust for the men who indulge in these things and withdraw our patronage from the papers which seek to bring our presidents into contempt before the people.

The circumstances which surrounded the death of Garfield were so reenacted in the death of McKinley that it will be appropriate to quote, slightly paraphrased, the words of Blaine's magnificent oration on the death of his chief, delivered in the House of Representatives:

"Surely, if happiness can ever come from the honors or triumphs of this world, on that September day President McKinley may well have been a happy man. No foreboding of evil haunted him; no slightest premonition of danger clouded his sky. His terrible fate was upon him in an instant. One moment he stood erect, strong, confident in the years stretching out peacefully before him. The next he lay wounded, bleeding, helpless, doomed to weary days of torture, to silence and the grave."

"Great in life, he was surpassingly great in death. For no cause, in the very frenzy of vainglories and wickedness, by the red hand of murder he was thrust from the full tide of the world's interest, from its hopes, its aspirations, its victories, into the visible presence of death. Through days of agony, that was not less agony because silently borne, with clear sight and calm courage, he looked into his open grave. What blight and ruin met his anguished eyes, whose eyes may tell! What brilliant, broken plans, what baffled high ambitions, what sundering of strong, warm manhood's friendship, what bitter rending of sweet household ties!"

"Behold him a proud, expectant nation, a great host of sustaining friends, the wife of his youth, whose whole life lay in his. And his soul was not shaken; masterful in his mortal weakness he became the center of a nation's love, enshrined in the prayers of a world. But all the love and all the sympathy could not share with him, his suffering. With unfaltering front, he faced death, with simple resignation he bowed to the divine decree," saying "It is God's will."

Such is human destiny. Such the common fate of all.

We are but human beings at birth, and we are but human beings at death, whatever we may do or achieve in our career between those two eternities—the eternity which precedes birth and the eternity which succeeds death. "The glories of our birth and state are shadows, not substantial things; There is no armor against fate; Death lays his icy hands on kings; Sceptre and crown, Must tumble down And in the dust be equal made. With the poor crooked scythe and spade."

"The garlands wither on your brow, Then boast no more your mighty deeds; Upon death's purple altar, now, See where the victor victim bleeds! All heads must come To the cold tomb, Only the actions of the just, Small sweet and blossom in the dust."

Upon death's purple altar, now, See where the victor victim bleeds! All heads must come To the cold tomb, Only the actions of the just, Small sweet and blossom in the dust."

FUNERAL ORATION

Upon the Public and Military Character of President William McKinley, by Rev. Schindel.

Rev. J. C. Schindel, pastor of St. Paul's Lutheran church, spoke as follows:

We are here today, my countrymen to memorialize not the mortal but the immortal of our nation's martyred dead. The emblems of a nation's grief have made a funeral pall of every home and heart north and south, east and west. All over this fair land of our sobs of sorrow mark the mourners' grief at the tragic, murderous death of our loved President. Only those whose talents, whose public services, whose virtues have merited and received the honored and distinguished position of the Presidency of these United States are thus honored at the shrine of our great Republic. And when in the stillness of that upper room, his soul passed from us, McKinley—Ohio's gifted son—died the foremost statesman of his day. Macaulay wisely said, "Men eminent in learning, in statesmanship, in war and in the gentle arts of peace, are not fully appreciated by their contemporaries" and the state of the Holy Scriptures standeth true, "The day of a man's death is better than the day of his birth." Today we miss his subtle generalship of men, his wise governance in politics, his conservative personality in affairs, effecting the world's great powers, the inspiration of his prophetic hope of our country's commercial future, and in the missing know the utmost of our loss. Nations yet unborn shall read the pages of our Nation's history, written by his gentle hand, and in the reading find profound interest and infinite profit.

President McKinley had a talent for government. The elements of character which make men public leaders of men found in him full fruition. He had the wisdom and sagacity to perceive his countrymen's need, the courage of logical conviction and the stamina of decision to act. He made minute and careful study of the specific needs of every department of state so that when he presented his beneficent tariff bill for the suffrages of his congressional colleagues, they became, per force of irrefutable argument, the followers of his political generalship and the disciples of his political faith. He had implicit confidence in the masses and no act of legislation which accomplished the elevation of the people was foreign to his heart's best interests; his head and heart and hand were ever, always for the people's good. Of him Harrison truly said, "He has honored his state and his country by his conspicuous services in high legislative and executive places. No man more than he is familiar with the questions which now engage public thought. No man is more able than he lucidly to set them before the people." He was not an eloquent man as the schools teach eloquence, nor was he a logician like Bacon, but his eloquence and logic persuaded men in spite of themselves because his principles met the progressive demand of good, wise and safe government. As the Chief Executive of this splendid Commonwealth of Ohio, he gave us what he promised, an economical and honorable administration; and the improvement of the public service stands to day a monument to his untiring zeal and unquestioned statesmanship. As President of eighty millions of free men, McKinley's "Pull Dinner Pail" was no myth or fabrication of the stump orator's brain, but a reality in factories' whirling wheels, in enlarging and enlarging foreign trade, in the stability of home markets and of financial faith. All his life, he was a public man; and in it all, through it all, despite political corruption of the vilest sort, he was frank, open, honest, sincere.

"He never sold the truth to serve the hour, Nor paltered with Eternal God for power." When that strange charm of his personality, "which falls upon our spirits today like a holy enchantment," "What the secret of the power of this one man over the millions of his countrymen? Is it sufficient, as Dr. Newman asks, that he achieved success where success seemed impossible, defeated defeat and proved himself self equal to every public task? We must go beneath the surface of the man to find him as he is; to know that he wore no disguise. "He had a winnow in his heart." Of McKinley it may be said as Homer's Iliad Hero declares,

"I hate with perfect hatred, Hate him like the gates of hell, Who within him one thought harbors: While his lips another tell." His untarnished sincerity made him the safe and conservative party leader; he was and gave weight and influence to his political counsels.

"Divinely gifted man, Whose life in low estate began, And on a simple village green, Who breaks his birth's invidious bars And grasps the skirts of happy chance And breaks the blows of circumstance And grapples with his evil stars; Who makes by love his merit known And lives to catch the golden keys To mould a mighty State's decrees, And shape the whisper of the throne. And moving up from high to higher Becomes, on fortune's crowning slope The pillar of a people's hope."

William McKinley was a comrade in arms. He was a typical American soldier, shirking no duty, obeying every command. With an unflinching trust in the principles for which the Federal army stood, he became one of the thousands of Ohio's patriotic and loyal sons to respond to the call for men in defense of flag and constitution. He gave—as many of you did—the best years of his young life to the active military service of his country. His promotion came upon the field. He won his Lieutenantcy at hard fought Antietam. Carnifex Perry with South mountain and the Shenandoah Valley had transformed the country lad of 20 into a veteran and when on the 25th of July, '64 he was commissioned a Captain in the army of the Potomac, he accepted the responsibility and performed the duties of his new position of trust and honor with unflinching courage and satisfaction to every superior. "For brave, and meritorious service at Opequan, Fisher's Creek and Cedar Hill" he was breveted major and mustered out after more than four years' continuous service. This is his brief but brilliant military record from '61 to '65. But who can and will write the record of his careful, conservative and eminently successful generalship of the recent war with Spain? Tell his heart's anxiety? Portray his noble purposes? Unfold the future, with prophetic eye or that war's result?

And now he is dead. Dead in the maturity and development of widely conceived plans for the peace, prosperity and greater growth of his country! Dead in the plenitude of his splendid powers! And how dead? Need I tell you, my countrymen? Shall I repeat the story of the hell-born crime?

Yes, let the bells toll solemnly as we, our murdered President, is borne from the quietude of his home to the silent city of the dead through lines of blue and burnished steel—soldiers of Ohio—"His Own"—but let the ringing go on after the clouds have fallen until the knell of anarchy, in any and every form, is sounded in our native land.

To four hundred thousand of the Grand Army of the Republic from five thousand posts, comes a sense of irreparable loss, and five hundred patriot soldiers of two wars, who died of shot and shell and cruel wounds and fell disease, welcome Comrade McKinley home!

When, in the narrow quarters that shall be His resting-place 'til God's great reveille, McKinley's corse is laid with tender care, And crash of rifles thrice hath rent the air.

There comes a little pause: Then with set face

The bronzed bugler leaves the ranks a pace,

And in the hush that settles over all Prepares to sound the melancholy call Which signifies that all indeed is o'er—that naught remains to do him honor more.

Mark how the bugle wails the mournful note! What pathos echoes from its brazen throat!

Low—slow and sad—its tones rise soft and clear, Each one the seeming symbol of a tear.

Until the end, then holds the final strain And voices in it all of grief and pain, Then dies away, as though in vain regret That it must sound the signal that shall set

The limit of the ministry of friends, And mark the moment love's last labor ends.

—Charles Stirling Anderson.

Paid to the Deceased by V. Rev. B. M. O'Boylan of St. Francis de Sales Church.

"The Civil Life of President McKinley" was the subject assigned the V. Rev. B. M. O'Boylan of St. Francis de Sales church, Newark. He said: Friends and Fellow Citizens:—Had our deceased President never been elected to his high office, perhaps, most of his civic virtues would never have been known. Certainly they could never have been illustrated on such a scale, nor made known to the present and future generation, as they have since his election to the presidency.

He would have an honorable place among the best governors of his native state. His name would go down to posterity as one of the most active and sincere politicians of his party, and, for a brief period and within a limited circle, he would be remembered as a devoted husband and a useful citizen. But those grand traits which he displayed from the time of his first inauguration down to the time of his untimely death would have been but little known, and the useful person which they teach his countrymen today, and will be an object lesson for ages to come for the benefit of all who succeed him in office as well as for all who are to be the future bulwark of his country, would have been shut out from the gaze of future ages had he not been raised to the highest position in this Republic.

In gauging the character of President McKinley, viewed in his civil life, we must therefore take it in connection with the high office he occupied, for had he not the virtues suitable to that position prior to his advancement to it, he could never, or only with great difficulty, have acquired them after he had entered into it. And it is well for us on the present occasion that all the loyal citizens of our great Nation can enter into the spirit of sorrow which permeates every sincere breast throughout this land, with that decorum and gravity which the solemnity of his funeral rites demand. It is well that the voice of vengeance was not heeded which would snatch from the hand of law the criminal who murdered him, and given over to eternity without trial the guilty soul. This would have rebed our deceased President of much of the profound respect which bends around his obsequies today, and would have tarnished the majestic aspect that Justice should always bear in the presence of death. Furthermore, it would be a stunning blow at the calm and dignified hero himself, who, when mortally wounded, without warning and without cause, an innocent victim to his confidence in every human being to whom he entrusted his friendly hand, instead of losing his poise of mind or allowing the impulse of self-defense to rouse him, calmly turned to those who surrounded him and spoke kind words of excuse for his miserable assassin. "Never mind," he said, "the poor fellow didn't know what he was doing", or words to that effect. How like the Prince of Peace who exclaimed "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." Men in private life may or may not have virtues for all the public can judge, but when a man like the President of the United States goes forth upon his career, the public eye is all about him, and his virtues or vices are soon discovered. The term virtue in Latin expresses strength, but as it is now generally received, it means every natural or acquired gift which renders a man good in himself, and good in his acts to other, and it may always remain merely a natural gift or, by his free union with the grace of God, it can raise itself to the supernatural state and unite its subject to God, in which union consists perfection and supreme felicity. At least it is the beginning and root of all perfection and real happiness.

Now, in judging the character of a man we must above all things take into consideration the particular virtues for which he was distinguished; and as I am assigned by the committee of arrangements to speak on the Civil Life of President McKinley, I shall view his virtues as closely as I possibly can from that standpoint, remembering, however, what I have already advanced, that it was in the presidency his predominant traits of character shone forth and became the admiration of the world.

Americans may well feel proud of this ruler. To the glorious name of Washington, whose very sound thrills the heart of every patriot as well as to that of everyone of his successors down to his whose obsequies we are now celebrating, our Country with honest pride and grateful heart can point with unalloyed joy, and exulting cry:—"who is like to our strong ones among the rulers of the world?" To the children of a republic, and such a republic as this, whose like has never been established on God's footstool, what king or potentate of any people can be compared with their Chief? He does not come by the accident of birth, but by their free and untrammelled choice to rule over them, and his reign is not sustained by power placed in his hands by the great and mighty ones of the land, but by the more Godlike action, the majestic movement and the free voice of the majority of the people to whose decision the whole nation bows in profound and cheerful obedience. When such a ruler is snatched away from the body politic, especially by the hand of felonious Anarchy, it is any wonder that a thrill of horror is felt throughout the length and breadth of the land? It is our chosen one that is taken away; our commander and ruler placed above us by our own voice; the free monarch of a free people; the ruler of a nation by the nation's consent; the guardian of the people's rights and liberties; the father of his people and the head of a government which does not look so much to the welfare of the people as the people do, or at least, should do, to its protection and maintenance; much after the manner that strong and obedient children should stand around, cherish, protect and defend their parents.

Now, the chief, whose moral remains we follow today in spirit to their last resting place, was one of those ideals of our popular form of government who exemplified in his life that the ruler of a Republic Democracy can be headed around with more than the dignity of royalty; because whatever virtues shine forth from the Presidential chair are nothing to the glamour of the monarch's throne; nothing to the halo that his very flings around a dynasty, notwithstanding the assumption that the king can do no wrong; but on the contrary, they draw all their vitality, brilliancy and glory from genuine worth, and are acknowledged and enthroned by the untrammelled and intelligent loyalty of freemen. It is a proverb that he who would be a successful ruler should himself know how to obey; and in this I find the first grand trait of our President's character. Obedient to his parents, and devotedly attached to his mother, who preceded him to the tomb but a short time ago, it was but natural to expect that he would be obedient to the call of his fatherland and enlist in the ranks for her defense. Descended from that great old Irish stock, who are always found wherever Freedom calls her sons in defence of the sacred rights of man and God-like liberty, the young and gentle scion of a family, who gave a grand uncle and namesake of his own, a sacrifice on the altar to the cause of Ireland's struggle for freedom, it was but proper that he should be found in the ranks of the volunteers who rushed to the rescue of the Union—that one great and decisive struggle paramount in importance and its far-reaching influence to all the events of the last century. The salvation of the Union was the salvation of American liberty, and one of the greatest blessings of any age to universal liberty and the cause of human happiness.

Next to obedience we find the virtue of fidelity and marital love illustrated in President McKinley's life, such as was never surpassed by any President or monarch of modern times. I need say but little on this subject as the world is full of it today. But if my voice could be heard by every man throughout this great republic, I would say, Let the example of our deceased President be yours. The monster of Impurity is eating into the mind, the soul, yea, the very tissues and vitals of the human body as much in this country as it is in any other on the face of the earth; and if there be one we should hate more than another, it is this unnamable one, which crushes the pure love of God out of the heart; exiles innocence and peace from the family circle; fills the courts with claims for divorce, based on crimes that make Purity veil her face and tremble at the baseness of human depravity; tares children from their parents' embraces; fills our cities and hamlets with ruined souls and diseased bodies intended to be the temples of the living and All-Holy God; covers with incurable and revolting diseases the masterpiece of the Divinity; causes angels to weep and demons to mock at the destruction and desolation which it brings upon the temples reconstructed and embellished by the merits of the God-man; and, in fine, makes the face of all that is noble and pure in man burn with shame and groan in sorrow for the lamentable weakness of fallen humanity. Oh, the accursed monster of impurity!

Again, besides obedience, fidelity and marital purity, we find the virtues of kindness, prudence and courage beautifully illustrated in the civil life of our deceased Chief. There is no word in the world's dictionaries so sweet to the human ear as that of kindness. I love to repeat the words of the Great Apostle of the Gentiles: "When the charity and kindness of God our Saviour appeared"—kindness dearer to the heart than gifts of gold or precious stones; sweet consoler of breaking hearts and anxious cares; balm of the human voice which searches into the most hidden fibers of our being and heals the wounds of the spirit of sadness and disappointment. Oh thou who sittest only in the heart of the true, teach me never more to utter an unkind word! Kindness—this was one of his active virtues. It is a daughter of mercy; and when his life blood began to ebb away it was this virtue that prompted him, like the Prince of Peace, to excuse his murderer. Friends and fellow citizens let this grand and overmastering virtue shine deeply into your minds, and never forget it when any wrong is done to you.

Again, our deceased Chief had courage. Not that courage that recklessly rushes forth as in the amphitheatre amid the sound of music and the applause of the multitude; nor yet that dashing kind that is roused in the rush and clash of arms when the brazen trumpets sound to battle and the ringing cheers of comrades impel the spirit to spurn death; but that calm imperishable, conscious courage, which first of all considers the cause, weighs the effect and then moves onward to take command and hold or to be obedient to the commander.

Like Washington and Lincoln, President McKinley had a crisis that tried his prudence and fortitude. With the eye of a statesman he surveyed the whole situation, and with the strength of a giant he stood at the helm of the Ship of State while the country was aflame with the spirit of war. Though

Some of our patrons may think the Gas Company are trying to take advantage of the consumers of Gas by advancing the price, but we assure you that such is not the case. The Company would prefer if every consumer would burn gas by meter, then all would be interested in saving this ideal fuel, but as long as there is nothing to compel the consumer to be saving, the waste will continue to go on, therefore you will notice we have made the prices on open grates higher than stoves or asbestos back walls, as we do not care to furnish gas for open grates. We hope the consumers will realize the position the Gas Company is in and the increased enormous expense each year to furnish this fuel.

All consumers having cook stoves only or open grates will do the Gas Company a great favor if they will call at the office and sign new contracts at once as the old contracts expire Oct. 1st, and to delay until October we could not take care of the rush. To private consumers having two or more fires the rate remains the same, and present contract holds.

The office will be open every evening until 9:00 P. M. from September 20th to October 1st, 1901, that our consumers may have an opportunity to come and sign a new contract early and thereby avoid the rush.
Office hours, for receiving gas and fitting receipts, 7:30 A. M. to 5:00 P. M., excepting the 9th and 10th of the month—open until 8:30 P. M.

the journals of the land, and specially those of the party out of power, raged with the most furious diatribes against him, calling him a coward and all the vile epithets that only the press of the United States knows how to command; though some of the staunchest of his own party, and even many of the pulpits of the country, impatient for vengeance after the disaster of the Battleship Maine, appealed to him for immediate action; though almost all the Nation seemed to be out of their wits through depending upon him for some decisive word that would send our arms against the hated Spaniard and drive him forever from our coasts; yet the man at the helm moved not. Calmly and surely he took the reins of the war steeds into his hands, determined to never let them slip until his conscience was convinced that war was a necessity. Then, and not till then, did he consent to slaughter the armies of a feeble foe.

But it was not alone the driving of Spain from her ancient possessions, that troubled him. With the heart of a true American citizen, who loved his country more than the honors of conquest, he foresaw that to advance her flag into the lands separated so far from the seat of government and so geometrically and ethnically severed from the grand old Union of States, would be a step fraught with the most important responsibility. Nevertheless when it had to be done, he did it, and to the last breath of his life, and in particular in his last remarkable speech, he showed that his first and only duty was to guard the welfare of his country and guide his fellow citizens on the safest way to lasting peace and prosperity. During that trying ordeal to which he was then subjected, it is well known that he counted among his wisest counsellors and most trusted friends the illustrious Archbishop Ireland, and the great and gentle Bishop Watson of Columbus. In many respects the latter was like his friend and neighbor, the President, but above all in mercy and kindness. Since both are now at rest from the world forever let me say in this connection that never had the Episcopal chair of any diocese a more charitable heart and few had a greater mind than Bishop Watson, and like his distinguished friend and fellow citizen, the dead President, his virtues did not prevent the stings of ingratitude and malignant envy from wounding him. Still to the last, even like him whom we bury today, he met his foes only with the weapons of kindness and forgiveness.

And now fellow citizens, in the death of the great and good man whose requiem is sung today from the depths of the sorrowful hearts of his people, let us bend our minds in humble submission and gratitude to God who gave him in dying moments the grace to resign his soul most willingly into the hands of his Creator. In that supreme moment when his soul was swinging, like a bird on the spray, over the confines of eternity, what a consolation for himself and his dear spouse to think that he was able to say to his supreme Judge, "Not my will but Thine be done." And as his freed spirit left its earthly casement, let us hope that it caught a vision of the present and future of his beloved republic, crowned among the nations of the earth as the apotheosis of true freedom; the greatest work of modern times after that of Christianity; the foster land of the untitled nobility; the home where the genius for popular government has demonstrated that an educated and liberty-loving people are as capable of ruling themselves and adjusting themselves to the shocks of political upheavals, and righting again the Ship of State as the best balanced monarchy or empire that ever existed in the world.

Yes, my fellow citizens, the time of our Republic's test has long since passed away. She is no longer a stripling but a full grown, possessed of wisdom, of temperance, of justice, of knowledge, of wealth, and well-balanced central and local governments, and of all the resources at her command that are needed to secure and defend her matchless constitution, her sacred rights, her priceless freedom, her incomparable climate and countless domains. All honor then, that is justly due, be given to him, and peace forever to the soul of President McKinley, whose life was spent and sacrificed in the service of this glorious republican government!

ADDRESS

Delivered by Rev. Arthur E. Johnson, Pastor of the First Methodist Episcopal Church.

Rev. A. E. Johnson, of the First M. E. church, spoke as follows:
Louis XIV. was dead. His body lies in state in the gorgeous cathedral of Notre Dame. In the dim, funereal gloom is assembled all the chivalry of France. There the dead king lies upon the bier, the costly catafalque covered with all the emblazonments and insignia of royalty. This was no ordinary king; for 70 years he had held the scepter of France and he had obtained from his obsequious flatterers the name of "The Magnificent." Massillon, the court preacher, now enters the pulpit. He stands a moment silent, and then announces his text from the Book of Ecclesiastes, "Lo! I have become great!" Again he stands silent, his hands crossed over his breast, his eyes fixed upon the coffin. The assembled multitude hold their breath in a hush of expectancy which was awful in its intensity. He speaks at last: "There is nothing great but God." The people start at these words and look around them, as if to see Him who is invisible. God is infinitely great because he is infinitely good. For goodness lies at the base of all true and lasting greatness.

Back of the lawyer, the civilian, the soldier is the man; and the real worth and force of character is, after all, determined by the relation of the soul to God.

Three factors enter into the religious life, and determine the true character of every man. These are, hereditary tendency, personal choice and private conduct. Let us see how these three factors entered into and determined the religious life of Wm. McKinley.

He came of that Scotch-Irish strain of blood, which has, as yet, had but scant justice done by its historians. In the middle states this strain, dominant traits of which are, serious views of life and strong religious convictions, has been most prolific in producing men of mark in various callings. McKinley's paternal grandfather was a revolutionary soldier, who spent his last days at the home of his grandson. But it was probably from his maternal ancestry that Wm. McKinley got his leading traits of character. His mother was an Allison, of Scotch Covenant stock. The Allison came to America in quest of religious freedom. Nancy Allison McKinley was a profoundly religious woman. She imparted the stamp of her character upon all of her nine children. There were no black sheep in her flock, as they all grew up to be serious, competent men and women.

With the choices of life heredity and environment have much to do. The early surroundings of McKinley were such as were well calculated to add strength to his natural bent. The Western reserve in his boyhood days was as Yankee as Massachusetts or Connecticut. The people around him were keenly alive to the religious and reform movements of the times. In Poland, the town where he lived, was a station of the "Underground Railroad." He remembered well the excitement which prevailed when the fugitive slave law of 1850 was passed, and the meeting held in his home town which denounced that law. Almost everybody about him was versed in religious controversy, and all questions of conscience were familiar to him. At sixteen Wm. McKinley united with the Methodist Episcopal church, in which fellowship he remained the rest of his life.

He was not a bigot or a partisan in religious matters, but made his own choice after due deliberation, and allowed others to do the same, treating them as friends and brothers. Choosing God and goodness, he found a home in one of the branches of the Christian church.

The outward conduct of his life was consistent with the choice made in boyhood. In 1871 he was married to Ida Saxton, a banker's daughter, and a teacher in the Sunday school of the Presbyterian church in Canton. She transferred her membership to the church of which he was a member. Two children were born to them, and both were claimed by death before they were a year old.

for the older reached the age of four. The grief of the young mother wrecked her health and left her a victim to a nervous disease which made her a cripple for life, able to walk only with pain and with a supporting arm. The devoted husband saw before him the tragic vision of a childless life and the companionship of an incurable invalid. No man ever accepted such a situation with more cheerful self-abnegation. He made himself the faithful and skilled nurse of his unfortunate wife and gave every hour he could spare from his work to the task of lightening her sorrows and cheering her broken life. This course he pursued unfalteringly for more than 20 years, without admitting in his own secret thought that he had been doing anything worthy of praise. One is reminded of the parallel case of Wendell Phillips whose invalid wife inspired and encouraged to "do his best and not shilly-shally." Throughout his exceedingly busy and eventful life he was regular and faithful in his attendance on divine worship.

By inherited tendency, personal choice and private life Wm. McKinley is commended to the men of his, and all succeeding generations as an example of clean Christian manhood. "Nearer, My God, to Thee" has become even more dear to the Christian church because he chanted it as his death song. And his last words, "It's God's way! His will be done!" will be remembered as long as human hearts have sorrows and the law of vicarious sacrifice continues to the method of all human progress.

In the city of Rome stands a magnificent column of Calara marble 135 feet in height. The shaft, 97 feet high, varies from 12 feet in diameter at the base, to 10 feet at the top, and is covered with a series of bas-reliefs running from bottom to top in a spiral curve. The pictures represent the campaigns of the Emperor Trajan against the Decians, Michael Angelo and other artists studied these carvings for models of style. The column stood in Trajan's forum and his statue was originally, upon the summit. The statue of Peter, the Apostle, now stands where that of Trajan once stood.

This column is a parable in stone. All works not wrought in God, and all greatness not based on goodness, shall bite the dust, and mould among the broken potsherds of the forgotten past. Above them all, at last, shall stand in the calm serenity of everlasting victory, the memorial of the humblest man who has been a coworker with God and a lover of men.

It Takes a Remedy of Uncommon Merit to Draw the Unqualified Praise of a Successful Practicing Physician.

Dr. J. W. Bates of Corfu, N. Y., states: "A most remarkable case has come under my hands of late and has fully convinced me of the wonderful power of Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills over diseases of the nerves."

"A young lady who was treated for over two years for epilepsy by two doctors was given up to die. I found that her sickness was not epilepsy, but nervous troubles, due to menstrual derangements, and presented four of Dr. Chase's Nerve Pills a day, after meals and at bed-time. Since that time she has not had a single bad spell. Her health has rapidly improved, she has gained about 15 pounds in weight, and I do not hesitate to state that Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills have saved her life and restored her to health."

Mrs. Fawcett of Marietta, St., St. Clairsville, O., says: "I have used Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills and can recommend them to others as a good sound reliable nerve and general tonic. When I got the box of the Pills I was complaining of nervousness, weakness and pain—through the shoulders—rheumatic in type—digestion not over good as usual. The effect of the medicine has been very satisfactory indeed. So marked has been the change towards health and comfort I can conscientiously say they are fine and what they are represented to be. At my advanced age I feel I am getting all the benefit possible."

Mrs. M. J. Hubbard of Railroad Avenue, Sistersville, W. Va., says: "I like Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Pills. I was nervous, excitable, unable to sleep. I had not taken the medicine long when my nerves were steady and strong—my physical strength and energy back and my sleep sound and natural."

JUDGE HUNTER

Spoke Eloquently at the Auditorium Thursday on President McKin-ley's Assassination.

Judge S. M. Hunter spoke as follows:

The terrible bolt which has been suspended over our devoted Nation, has at last fallen, and the President of the United States, who had won the respect of every political party and every section of our beautiful land, has breathed his soul away amid darkness and pain, and mingled his dying sighs with the sobbing of his ouraged and broken hearted people.
The dark pall of sorrow and gloom which has hung over us since the dastardly shot was fired, has closed around us; and naught is heard in this great Union but the wailing and mourning of a sadly afflicted people.
And today we are gathered here to pay the last sad memorial rites, which attend the funeral of our dead President.

On this day those honored remains are laid away in the bosom of his native state, our beautiful Ohio, and there they will peacefully repose until the sea shall give up its dead, on the last great day.

"The trumpet may sound, and the loud cannon rattle.

He sees not, he hears not, he's free from all pain.

He sleeps his last sleep, he has fought his last battle.

No sound can awake him to glory
again."

William McKinley became President of the United States under the most favorable auspices for his administration. He was opposed for election by a great political party—and in all free countries there must be political parties.
It is only in absolute monarchies like Russia, Turkey, or China where the people have no say, that political parties do not exist, but I must say that no President from Washington, ever received less personal abuse from his opponents than President McKinley. Every section of the country expected justice at his hands and would have received justice.

I believe it was the aim of this man to obliterate all feelings of enmity between the sections which grew out of the civil war. It was his mission to heal our Nation's wounds, not to tear them afresh. It was his mission to staunch our Nation's blood, not to increase its flow. His mission was reconciliation and the united greatness of our common country, and as the apostle of that reconciliation he was hailed by every party and every state from Florida to Vancouver and from the river St. Lawrence to the Rio Grande.

And now he is gone. In the midst of all these hopes and expectations, and while political parties were yielding to their better impulses, the shot of the assassin struck him down and shook the whole Nation from one ocean strand to the other. Oh, who can describe the wild cry of horror that rose in one frenzied swell from one end of our broad land to the other, while the miserable coward slunk off to jail to escape the vengeance of an outraged people. Let his be the "traitor's course."

"Oh, for a tongue to curse the slave, Whose treason like a deadly lightning Falls o'er the councils of the brave And blasts them in their hour of might.

May life's unblest cup for him.
Be drugged with treachery to the brim:

His country's curse, his children's shame.

Unknown to virtue, peace and fame.

Just Prophet let this damned on-dwell

Beholding Heaven—but tasting Hell!"

And what about this assassin? I am bound to confess that when the black news first reached us of the dastard's shot, I thought the best solution of the matter was to let the mou-tain have him, and let it tear the assassin limb from limb and cast the fragments to the four winds of heaven. He deserves it all; and so far as the assassin himself was concerned such a punishment was not too great; but I know now that it is all wrong. We are a Nation of law. We cannot punish an assassin by becoming assassins ourselves. We cannot punish anarchy by being anarchists ourselves.
No punishment can be too great, and the assassin will go down to his dishonored grave attended by the curses and execrations of the civilized world.

But there must be no unlawful taking of the assassin's life. He must be left to the law, and you can trust him to the law. The law never sleeps.
Its sword is ever drawn. Its scourge never tires. Its majesty is ever vindicated, and nothing becomes this Nation more, than protecting the assassin himself from assassination. But while it protects him from unlawful violence it will indict him according to law, try him according to law, and hang him according to law. The ceremonies of this day are not only as a memorial of McKinley's life and gallant death, but they also testify to our horror of the manner of his death, and our horror of the assassin.

Today his honored remains, followed by a pageant equal to that which is accorded to the mightiest on earth, are laid in the grave in his own native State. The funeral is not there alone; but these ceremonies extend to every State and county in the Union.
Soon a noble monument will mark his resting place. But lay the foundation of that monument in the very center of the earth, and rear its glittering column to the very skies, and it will not compare with the monument already reared in the hearts of the people, nor with that other monument that will be reared in the history of the world by the record of the proceedings of this great day.

He is the Nation's dead. Here comes the South with surmising eyes, foregiving and being forgiven, and place her immortals upon his grave. Here comes the Republican party, and here also comes the Democratic party, with myself in the midst of it, and here they blend their tears over his coffin.

Like a soldier shot down in the discharge of his duty, his loss is the Nation's loss, and the care of his family must be the Nation's care.

Who, without deepest emotion, can contemplate that suffering wife, with her head bowed down, her hand over her mouth and her mouth in the dust; ye yielding to the will of God, with that Christian fortitude, which strengthened him in his hour of trial, and which in his hour of trial will strengthen her.

Let us place our dead President upon the Mount of Remembrance, and year by year, embalm his memory anew. His name goes down to succeeding ages, and is written on the pages of history, and blazoned on the temple of Fame; and in the dim and shadowy future, when this great Nation shall encompass the continent, when more than a hundred millions of people shall take shelter under the Constitution and the stars and stripes, then the children will ask their mothers for the story of McKinley, his boyhood, his manhood, and his sorrowful death;

and the mother will point to McKinley, as an example to her boys, she will tell them how he mounted from the cabin to the White House, and became the executive of the greatest Nation in the world. The story of McKinley will be told in the school books of the States, and will be read in every language, and in every clime. May green grow the turf over his grave:

"By fairy hands his knell is rung,
By angel lips his dirge is sung,
There Honor comes, a pilgrim gray
To bless the turf that wraps his clay;
And Freedom shall awhile repair
To dwell a weeping hermit there."

QUEER ACTIONS

Of Elmer Sherrard Frightened People in the East End—Will be Sent to the State Hospital.

This morning about 11 o'clock, the police were called to Baltimore street, where the actions of Elmer Sherrard,
a married man aged about 35 years, frightened the neighbors and pedestrians. He was climbing trees, running back and forth in different door-yards, pulling weeds, planting peach trees and acting in many ways as a man insane.

He was taken to the city prison and will be sent to the State Hospital. The attack this morning was a recurrence, as he was at one time in the asylum and discharged as cured.

MASONS

Held Memorial Services at Which Prof. Williams of Granville, and Prof. Townsend Spoke.

Masonic Temple was filled to overflowing on Thursday night with the members of Newark Lodge No. 97 and Acme Lodge No. 554, F. & A. M., who had assembled to take part in the memorial services held in honor of the martyred President, William Mc-Kinley. Mr. A. F. Crayton, Master of Newark lodge, presided over the meeting.

The exercises were opened with a prayer by Prof. C. L. Williams, of Denison University, Granville, which was followed by a quartet consisting of Mrs.
C. W. Miller, Mrs. Annis Lawhead and Messrs. George Webber and Walter Ball, singing "Lead, Kindly Light."

Prof. C. L. Williams then addressed the assemblage on "The High Character of William McKinley, as President and a Brother Mason."

Prof. Williams in his address, spoke of the study he had made of the face of the dead President; that it would appear that the face indicated character that was antagonistic to its appearance, but the more one studied it the more kindly it appeared. The speaker cited numerous incidents in the President's life, which tended to bring him in closer contact with the common people of the country; that he himself had once been a witness of this trait of the President, before he had been even thought of as Governor of Ohio. He was waiting for a train in Canton. Mr. McKinley was also on the platform waiting for a train when a workman, attired in his blue overalls and with a corn-cob pipe in his mouth, approached him.
Mr. McKinley met him with a "Good morning, John," and a hearty clasp of the hand. Turning to a friend the workman said, "There is the finest man in the country." These things, continued the speaker, were the things that made all the people love him.

Prof. Williams' remarks were along the line of the gentleness and Christian character of the dead President, and were greatly appreciated by the large assembly.

Superintendent F. M. Townsend, of the public schools, followed Prof. Williams in a short address, which was attentively listened to until the close.

Prof. Townsend in his address dwelt principally on the duty of the hour, and the great danger that confronted the American people, and suggested that the Masonic as well as other secret societies might do a great deal towards the stamping out of anarchy;

that the Masonic and other secret societies already formed a mighty organization in this country that would be a power towards the crushing of the serpent, anarchy. He said that while there might have been two sides to Lincoln's assassination from the fact that the Southern people looked upon Lincoln as an enemy and J.
Wilkes Booth represented that feeling;
that Guiteau imagined that he had a personal grievance in the disappointment of receiving an appointment, but that in the assassination of President McKinley there was no malice entered into, and that it was not William Mc-Kinley whom the assassin meant to kill, but the President of the United States, and that it would have been the same had Bryan been President.

Czolgosz, the poor, miserable, misguided wretch, was only the tool of the guilty murderers.

"Nearer, My God, to Thee" was sung by the quartet, which was joined in by the audience, after which the benediction was pronounced by Prof.
Williams and the large audience was dismissed.

ing Resolutions on Death of the

ed by Newark Lodge No. 13, K. of P.
Thursday evening, Sept. 19, 1901:

Whereas, Our beloved President, the eminent statesman, the devoted husband, the Christian gentleman and our worthy brother, Wm. McKinley, has been stricken down at the hands of a murderous wretch, a miserable politroon whose name should be permitted to die unspoken and unwritten by any law abiding and liberty loving citizen, and whereas in his death the nation has lost its most eminent citizen and statesman, the wife has been deprived through her remaining years of a most devoted and loving companion, the church mourns the death of a cherished member, and we of an esteemed brother, and

Whereas, Our beloved country and the nations of the world in sympathy with her in this hour of bereavement, now stand by the side of his grave and looking up through the darkness of gloom, see written across the clouds, "It's God's plan, His will be done," the last words of our brother, showing his unflinching faith in the plans of his Creator; therefore be it

Resolved, By Newark Lodge, No. 13,
K. of P., that we do emulate the virtues and cherish the memory of our departed brother, the nation's chief.
That we do extend to his beloved wife
in this her dark hour of bereavement, our heartfelt and earnest sympathy.

Resolved, That we condemn the assassin, with all his coadjutors, as demonstrating not fit for life and unprepared to die, and that we recommend the passage of such laws as will forever exterminate, and keep our glorious country free from anarchists and anarchy with all its dire results.

Resolved, That we order a picture of our martyred President, suitably framed, to be hung on the walls of our lodge rooms.
